The Sexual Offences Act 2003 (SOA 2003) represents the most comprehensive and radical overhaul of the law relating to sexual offences ever undertaken in England and Wales. This chapter deals with non-consensual sexual offences; namely, rape, assault by penetration, sexual assault, and intentionally causing someone to engage in sexual activity. It also examines sexual offences against children below thirteen years of age, sexual offences against children aged thirteen to sixteen, causing a child to watch a sexual act, arranging or facilitating commission of a child sex offence, and meeting a child following sexual grooming, etc. Finally, the chapter explores offences of abuse of trust, family offences, offences involving mental disorder and other sexual offences such as those surrounding prostitution, pornography, and taking indecent photographs of children.