2. The Nature of a Contract of Employment

This chapter discusses the parties to a contract of employment, the distinction between employees and self-employed persons and other categories of parties to a contract of employment, looking at the different types of employment status and the tests used to decide which category a person falls into. It includes the status of directors, partners, office holders, ministers of religion and the police, as well as apprentices, posted workers, domestic servants and those working abroad and in offshore employment. It also has a discussion of whether people working in the gig economy are workers or employees. Further, the chapter looks at those on fixed term contracts and agency workers.

Access to the complete content on Law Trove requires a subscription or purchase. Public users are able to search the site and view the abstracts and keywords for each book and chapter without a subscription.
2. The Nature of a Contract of Employment

Please subscribe or login to access full text content.

If you have purchased a print title that contains an access code, please see the information provided with the code or instructions printed within the title for information about how to register your code.

For questions on access or troubleshooting, please check our FAQs, and if you can't find the answer there, please contact us.